TEXAS MARITAL PROPERTY LAW

Marital property law in Texas is based upon the community property system. Although some Texans regard the community property system as an unfathomable mystery, actually its rules are fairly easy to understand. They are also flexible because spouses who do not like the application of the rules to their situation can change the rules by written agreement either before marriage (called a premarital property agreement) or during the marriage (called a marital property agreement or community property partition agreement).

It is perhaps easiest to understand this system by imagining a hypothetical entity, known as "the community," that owns the community assets of the husband and wife. The husband and wife each have an undivided one-half (1/2) interest in the community. In addition to community property, Texas also recognizes the status of some property as separate property. The characterization of property as separate property or community property is significant in dividing property upon termination of the marriage by divorce or death.

Characterization of Property

Separate property includes property that is owned by either spouse before the marriage, property that is acquired during the marriage by gift, will, or inheritance, and property that is purchased with separate property funds. Also, separate property can be created by the spouses with a written agreement partitioning or exchanging community property.

Community property is defined by exclusion as all property other than separate property. The most common types of community property include salary, wages, and income generated from both community property and separate property. Some are surprised to learn that dividends and income earned on separate property investments are not separate property, but instead are community property.

Separate Property vs. Community

Separate Property	Community Property
Owned by spouse before marriage. Acquired during marriage by gift, will, or inheritance. Purchased during marriage with separate funds. Community property partitioned or exchanged by written agreement.	Salary and wages. Income from separate and community property. Assets acquired during marriage.* Assets acquired on credit during marriage.* Assets on hand at dissolution of marriage.* *Presumptively community property.

There is a presumption in Texas that all assets owned by a husband and wife are community property. All assets acquired during the marriage presumptively belong to the community. All assets on hand during the marriage, and on dissolution of the marriage by death or divorce, are presumptively community assets. Separate property must be proven to be separate by the spouse

My Husband, Warm The Bed

She thought that she was married to an ordinary person, but she did not expect he is a CEO who was indifferent to the outside world but sweet to her.
